Operating on an island during the pandemic has presented significant challenges to the businesses that make their homes there. However, award winning interior design firm, HomeWork Design Studio, sheds some light on how it's kept on delivering its excellent service in a time of tumult.

HomeWork Design Studio is a full-service interior design and renovations studio that has cemented itself as a big name in its industry. A member of the American Society of Interior Designers, as well as HGTV's Professional Designer Network, the studio enjoys working on both commercial and residential renovations and has earned a reputation for exceptional personalised service and sophisticated design. Regarding how it approaches its customer service, its Principal Designer Randall Waddell keeps four pillars at the heart of the business' operations:

1 Firstly, HomeWork Design Studio prides itself on a positive attitude. When a project presents challenges, Randall ensures that an optimistic and driven approach is kept in rising to meet them. Clients are provided with peace of mind that the issue will be resolved with finesse and efficiency.

2 Much value is placed on creatively solving problems. To HomeWork Design Studio, it is not just enough to overcome a challenge on a project site, but to go above and beyond to improve on it.

3 The studio actively listens to clients' wishes and adapts to their requests – even, and perhaps especially, when it conflicts with a pre-existing idea of that project. Patience and collaboration are a cornerstone of the company.

4 HomeWork Design Studio remains transparent with deadlines and workloads.

All these elements together combine to build long-lasting trust between the studio and any client.

Internally, HomeWork Design Studio has built a team of the best local minds in the industry, from its tradespersons to finishing suppliers. Open communication and transparency allows the diverse group of personalities to gel effectively and get the job done. '2020 has been one for the record books, and so far 2021 promises to be another roller coaster ride,' said Randall. For the twin islands, it has been a year since the first initial shutdowns caused by Covid-19 – a time that will go down in infamy as a period of trials for sectors across the board. As it faced disruption to import supply lines, the studio re-emphasized the support of local suppliers of materials and products more than ever. The importance of buying local and bolstering local talent has only risen since.

2021 Leading Designers Award
Most Innovative Interior Design Studio
Trinidad and Tobago

During the pandemic, so many persons have found the need to refit their home to suit a remote world in all aspects of life, and HomeWork Design Studio is prioritising updating its designs to suit this new paradigm. With an excellent team and having found solutions for any supply issues, Principal Designer Randall Waddell hopes to continue to showcase the best of Trinidad and Tobago to the international community. As a final word, Randall had this to say: 'It has been an absolute honour to have been a recipient of this LUXlife Magazine 2021 Leading Designers Award. We know what winning such a prestigious award means, we have managed to hit the ground running in 2021, and we are looking forward to what more this year will bring!'
